
Meji outbound: weekly report, week ending 2026-07-21

Data: live Instantly API pull 2026-07-21 (campaign analytics, lead states, full reply text).

Headline

- Four Car Audio is booked, and the warm campaign had its strongest week so far: 4.1% replying, against 2.9% the week before.
- Three of this week's replies gave last year's event as the reason they aren't coming back. Individually you've seen them; the first time they've clustered in one week is the part worth noting.
- Worth a decision: the warm campaign's opening line assumes the night went well, which reads badly to anyone it didn't go well for.

Results that matter

Booked

- Four Car Audio (Jas Dahele) confirmed and booked. He'd gone quiet, the automated follow-up on 8 July brought him back, and it closed inside about a week once you were on it.

The pattern across this week's replies

You worked all 13 of this week's real replies yourself, so none of the content below is new to you. What a week's view adds is the shape: three separate past attendees, in the same seven days, gave last year's event as the reason they aren't returning. That's the first time it's clustered like that.

Rachel Sturgess at Elmsmere is the one worth keeping for planning, because she's specific about causes rather than impressions: the Masquerade theme not carried through the decorations or front of house, desserts arriving after 10.30 once everyone else had finished, and entertainment staged on the floor where nobody past a few rows could see it. She contrasts it with welcome drinks on arrival, entertainment on a stage, and food kept flowing.

Vanessa Brooks is the one with a measurable cost attached: four tables a year, plus five companies that booked on her recommendation, and she's said she won't be recommending you again.

Housekeeping on our side

- Rebecca Mason had already booked with you; stopped from further sends.
- Vanita Patel has left Aspire; her two replacement contacts are on file.
- One unsubscribe request was actioned; that address is off all lists.

Scoreboard

Piece	Sent (WoW)	Contacted	Replies	Reply%	Opps	Bounce%
Warm re-engagement (P1) Active	215 (-24)	194	8	4.1%	2	5.1%
Corporate, decision-makers (P2A) Completed	0 (0)	0	0	0.0%	0	0.0%
Corporate, organisers (P2B) Paused	0 (0)	0	0	0.0%	0	0.0%

Corporate reads zero by design: both corporate campaigns are paused while the copy is rebuilt for September.

Corporate pipeline (in pounds)

Tracked at your stated contract values: GBP 2,000 to 15,000 per event, GBP 20,000+ a year for a multi-event client. An opportunity here is a live conversation, not a booked job.

- Corporate opportunities to date: 0, so the pounds line reads GBP 0. This is the number the September re-entry is built to move.
- Warm and Christmas are carrying 10 live opportunities between them. That was 11 until your Indian Brewery flag: it sat in the system as one of the two Christmas opportunities, and removing it also takes that campaign's indicative value from GBP 2,000 to GBP 1,000.

List runway (when each campaign runs out of new people)

Piece	Fresh contacts left	~New/day	Runway
Warm re-engagement (P1)	0	27.7	Fully worked
Corporate, decision-makers (P2A)	0	0.0	Paused for rebuild
Corporate, organisers (P2B)	3	0.0	Paused for rebuild
Christmas cold (P3)	0	0.0	Fully worked

The warm list has now reached everyone on it. The 585 people still in sequence will finish their follow-ups, and after that the warm campaign stops bringing in anyone new. Growing it again means a new source of past-customer contacts from your side.

Time and efficiency

- Contacts reached this week (all campaigns): 194
- Hours this week: 8
- Contacts per hour: about 24 (last week: about 25)

This week behind the scenes

- Went through every send and reply across all four campaigns from the last two months to work out why corporate returned nothing, rather than guessing at the copy. Delivery isn't the problem: corporate reaches mailboxes at the same rate as the Christmas campaign, which worked. And the corporate zero sits on roughly 110 contacts over the summer holidays, too small to read either way. That evidence, plus your answers this week, is what the September rebuild now runs on.

Next week

- Finish the corporate copy pack, built on awards as you picked, and send it over for your sign-off. Nothing goes out until you've approved it.
- Put the daily reply check in place so anything a real person sends is flagged to you the same day rather than waiting for this report.
- Bring the warm campaign's bounce rate back down; it touched 5.1% this week, which is the level where the platform starts auto-pausing a campaign.

Decisions that would help

- The warm campaign opens with "Hope you had a good night at [venue] with us, the food, the entertainment, the whole room. Hard to beat." For anyone whose night wasn't good, that line lands badly, and this week it drew three replies saying so. Do you want it softened, or branched so anyone who has complained before gets a different opening?
- Once the 585 in sequence finish, warm has no one new. If there's a further list of past customers on your side, that's the one thing that keeps it acquiring.
